

Day 5 – Affirm

Welcome to Day 5 of the Get the Money for College Challenge!

First and foremost, I want to congratulate you for making it to Day 5! You've done some great work over the last four days.

I want to recap what we shared so that you are prepared for all that's to come in our culminating event which happens this afternoon at 3 pm ET/12 pm PT.

Day 1: Thoughts and Words - we looked at the power of your thoughts and words that are at the core of helping your teen get money for college

Day 2: Aware - we discussed growth mindset and resiliency. You had an opportunity to reflect on your parenting style and consider the powerful shifts you can take to “do better” by your teen so they are encouraged to take action

Day 3: Action - we revealed external scholarship opportunities for your teen to take their first money move

Day 4: Amplify - we introduced the 5 factors for your teen to discover internal scholarship opportunities. Your reflections on these factors for your teen is critical to receiving the biggest scholarship opportunities possible.

This final day is about Affirm.

“Affirm” has a couple definitions that are appropriate for this final day of the challenge.

1. to state publicly
2. to offer encouragement

Today, when our community joins together for our culminating master class, I will affirm your next steps on this journey to Get the Money for College as I teach you my proven methods and approach that’s helped my students to receive an average $75,000 in scholarships. My aim during our time together is that you’ll be clear on the path forward so that you are not leaving the prospects of paying for college to chance.

On the first day of the challenge, I shared with you the core values of my Keep C.A.L.M. (College and Accelerated Leadership Methodology) framework and one of those values is Curiosity.

Curiosity is key in the college admissions process and to get the money for college because what colleges are looking for in those students that they recruit to their community is Intellectual Curiosity. Throughout our programs, we’re affirming students to nurture their curiosity.
